The labor cost has a significant influence on the economic results in chicory cultivation. Around 20% of the production cost consists of labor costs. The deployment of staff as efficiently as possible can therefore result in great savings which are certainly welcome in a price-sensitive market. The operational group wants to introduce Lean thinking, now mainly applied in the automotive sector, the cultivation of chicory, and more specifically in the process of cleaning and packing chicory. 09.50	Präsentation der Operationellen Gruppen / Presentation of Operational Groups  Jef Vercammen, director pome and stone fruit in PCFruit Dany Bylemans, Director of PCFruit  OG Biofruit Debuggers: Forest bugs cause great quality problems: pears and apples are strongly deformed, with the flesh containing yellow-orange/brown spongy to stony tissue. In organic pear orchards, more than 50% of production losses caused by forest bugs has been recorded in recent years. The operational group wants to seize the recent threat of the the brown marmorated stink bug (BMSB) ( Halyomorpha halys ) as an opportunity to exploit and implement new recently acquired knowledge in the development of new innovative and practice-oriented control strategies for controlling forest bugs in apple and pear orchards.  OG Plant for a customer: The objective is: increasing the profitability of the fruit farm by planting market-oriented varieties. Hence the title of the operational group: 'Plant for a customer'. The aim is to critically evaluate the process of renewal of varieties and to adjust it so that promising varieties can be planted earlier and better supported. This will reduce the chance of failure of varieties. The operational group wants to develop a process of renewal of varieties that is applicable to all types of fruit.
